Time to Upgrade: Why It's Worth Evaluating Your Sprinkler Heads

When was the last time you looked at your sprinkler system? If you're like most homeowners, the answer is probably "when I accidentally ran one over with the mower." But if your system is more than 10 years old, it's time to take a closer look—not because something is broken, but because modern sprinkler heads have made huge strides in efficiency and performance.

Many of us will equate 10 to 15 years ago as the 1990s, when in reality that was the 2015-2010 time frame. The truth is, many yard irrigation systems in the Inland Northwest haven't had a significant upgrade since well before that—and technology has moved on.

Why It Matters: Water, Coverage, and Cost

Old sprinkler heads—especially fixed spray nozzles—tend to use more water than necessary, apply it unevenly, and lead to runoff or dry spots. Newer heads are designed to solve all of that with smart engineering that saves water while improving coverage.

Here's what you gain by evaluating and upgrading:

Big Water Savings

Modern sprinkler heads, especially rotary nozzles like the MP Rotator, use 30–50% less water than traditional fixed spray heads. They do this by releasing multiple rotating streams of water at a slower rate, giving your soil time to absorb it without pooling or runoff. When these are paired with pressure-regulated bodies, you reduce misting and improve uniformity—leading to a healthier lawn with less water.

Better, More Even Coverage
One of the biggest flaws in older systems is inconsistent spray patterns. New heads are designed to offer uniform distribution, even in tricky yard layouts. That means fewer dry spots, fewer soggy areas, and a lot less guesswork. Plus, newer heads can cover larger areas per nozzle, meaning you may be able to reduce the total number of heads in your system without compromising coverage—great for maintenance and water bills.

Smarter Features
Today's sprinkler heads can work with smart controllers, rain sensors, and soil moisture sensors to fine-tune watering based on actual needs. Some systems even adjust automatically based on local weather. While these require a bit more investment up front, the savings and plant health benefits pay off quickly.

Easy Upgrades Without Ripping Up Your Yard
In most cases, replacing old heads with new ones is a drop-in upgrade. No need to dig up lines or redo your entire system. You just dig a little hole around the existing head, ensure that you dig lower than the connection you are going to screw the new sprinkler head on, and take a little brush with you, removing the dirt so it doesn't get into the water line will save you headaches later.
One other word of advice, make sure you check to see what diameter fittings that you have in your system, they do come in different sizes, and guessing while you are at the hardware store means that you have a 50/ 50 chance of a return trip to the store to get the right size.

Final Thought
A sprinkler system is one of those "out of sight, out of mind" pieces of infrastructure—until something goes wrong. But proactively upgrading your heads can cut water usage, lower your bills, and give you a greener lawn with less effort. If your system was installed before 2015 (and chances are it was), it's worth taking an hour this spring to evaluate it.
Because even if the lawnmower hasn't claimed any heads lately… your water bill might be.

So You Bought a Cedar Planter Box—Now What Are The Next Steps?

Cedar planter boxes are everywhere this spring—and for good reason. They look great, smell great, and hold up better than most other wood options when exposed to the elements. Whether you picked up a small tabletop herb box or a full-size standing planter for vegetables, there are a few important things to know before you fill it and forget it.

Here's how to get the most out of your cedar planter and make it last for many seasons to come.

Do You Need to Seal It?

Cedar is naturally rot-resistant, which is why it's so popular for outdoor use. However, "rot-resistant" doesn't mean "indestructible." If your planter will be exposed to heavy rain, direct sun, or long growing seasons, sealing it can help extend its life.

Use a non-toxic sealant or wood oil on the outside only if you plan to grow edibles.

Avoid sealing the inside unless you're using a food-safe liner, especially if you're planting vegetables.

Linseed oil or tung oil are good natural options for exterior protection without harsh chemicals.

Can You Stain It?

Yes, you can stain cedar—but keep in mind:

Use a stain + sealer combo if you want to preserve color and repel water.

Cedar naturally grays over time. If you like the rustic weathered look, you can skip staining altogether.

As with sealants, stick to exterior-grade, low-VOC options for food-growing boxes.

What Kind of Soil Should You Use?

Don't just fill your box with leftover yard dirt—it'll compact and drain poorly.

Use a light, fluffy raised bed mix or make your own:

1/3 compost
1/3 peat moss or coconut coir
1/3 vermiculite or perlite

For veggie planters, mix in an organic slow-release fertilizer to kickstart growth.

Standing beds may need several bags of soil, so plan accordingly—some larger ones take 5–10 cubic feet to fill.

Drainage Is Key

Cedar is great at resisting moisture damage, but standing water will still shorten its life.

Make sure your box has drainage holes at the bottom.

If you're placing the box on a deck or patio, elevate it slightly to allow water to escape.

Some people add a layer of gravel or small rocks at the bottom to improve drainage—this is optional but can help if your soil retains water.

Lining the Box: Yes or No?

For vegetables, consider lining the inside with landscape fabric or plastic with holes for drainage. This protects the wood while allowing roots to breathe.

For flowers or small decorative plants, it's less critical—but still helpful for longevity.

Planter Size & Purpose: Does It Matter?

Yes! How you treat and fill the box depends on how it's built and what you're planting:

Small herb box

Best used for : Herbs, annual flowers

Extra Considerations: Skip heavy soil, may not need lining

Final Tip

Whether you're growing tomatoes, petunias, or basil, remember this: cedar planters are an investment. A little care up front—choosing the right soil, sealing or staining the wood, and ensuring drainage—will keep them looking great and producing for years to come.

And if you leave them natural and let the cedar age gracefully? That silvery patina will look just as good as the plants growing inside.

Rejuvenating Your Lawn After Winter in Eastern Washington

As the gray skies are giving way to spring sun, it's time to turn our attention to the lawn. After a long, wet Pacific Northwest winter where our lawns have been sitting under many inches of snow and ice, you may find that your yard is now patchy, matted, or struggling to bounce back—but with the right care in May and June, you can get it looking lush and healthy again.
Here's a seasonal guide to help you revive your lawn and set it up for summer success.

Rake Out the Old and Let It Breathe
Even if you raked in the fall, it's smart to give your lawn a thorough comb-through in early May. Raking removes dead grass, leaves, and thatch (a buildup of organic material that can suffocate your grass). It also helps lift matted spots caused by snow mold or soggy conditions, allowing sunlight and oxygen to reach the roots. Also you want to get the pine needles that were missed in the fall off of the ground, these are very acidic and not a friend to your lawn.

Check Soil Compaction and Drainage
Heavy winter rains and snow can compact your soil, especially in clay-heavy areas common throughout the Inland Northwest. If you notice puddling or slow drainage, your lawn might benefit from aeration. A core aerator pulls small plugs from the ground, improving airflow and allowing water and nutrients to reach the root zone.

Fertilize Wisely (But Not Too Early)
Many homeowners rush to fertilize as soon as the weather warms up. But in the Pacific Northwest, it's best to wait until late May or early June when the grass is actively growing. A balanced, slow-release fertilizer helps replenish nutrients and supports strong root growth. Avoid high-nitrogen fertilizers too early, or you'll encourage top growth at the expense of deep roots.

To Bag or to Mulch? That Is the Question
One of the most common spring mowing questions is: Should I bag or mulch? The answer depends on your timing and grass condition:

Bag your clippings:
- The first few mows of the season, especially if your grass is long or wet.
- If you're mowing areas with leftover moss, weeds, or fungal patches you don't want to spread.
- When cleaning up after dethatching or raking.

Mulch your clippings:
- Once you're into a regular mowing rhythm, and the clippings are short and dry.
- Mulching returns nitrogen and organic matter to your soil, reducing fertilizer needs.
- Modern mowers with mulching blades do this cleanly—no clumps or mess.
- Just don't let clippings get too thick. If you're cutting more than 1/3 of the grass blade height, consider bagging that mow.

Consider a Soil Test
If your lawn still struggles year after year, a simple soil test from a local extension service or garden center can reveal nutrient imbalances, pH issues, or other hidden problems. Correcting these with targeted treatments often brings dramatic improvement. Lawn care is a science, and if you are not getting the results you desire, we have many professionals in our Yard & Garden services section that can help you get the yard that you want.

Final Tips
- Set your mower height to 2.5–3 inches to encourage deeper roots.
- Watch for moss, especially in shady or poorly drained areas—it's a sign of compacted or acidic soil.
- Water deeply and infrequently once the weather turns dry; about 1 inch per week is ideal.

PLANT VEGGIES

Daytime air temps are favorable; nighttime temps are getting warmer and so is the soil. Our last average frost date is May 15. Prepare your vegetable beds and get ready to plant tomatoes, root crops, leafy greens & more!

DIVIDE PERENNIALS

Now is a good time to divide perennials that have grown too large for their space or if you want to move plants around your garden. Depending on the plant, there are several ways to do this job.

NURTURE BENEFICIALS

Many insects and other small creatures are desirable to have in your garden. Take special care to provide food, shelter and water. Avoid using broad spectrum insecticides that kill even the good guys!
